Dates Title of qualification awarded Principal subjects/occupational skills covered Name and type of organisation providing education and training	6th July 2010 – LLB in Law, mark 110/110. Doctor in Jurisprudence The LLB in Jurisprudence course induces the students to acquire full knowledge of analysis and combinations of norms and the skill to expose in written and oral form with full understanding of the theological and practical consequences, as well in order to present reasonable and appropriate argumentation for the case in question, or even for theoretical matters. The implementation of language skills covers, also, other languages used in the European Union, which use is, nowadays, necessary to work in our integrated European system. The course offers the students the possibility to reach the knowledge needed for those who wish to pursue an even more advanced level of studies by teaching the various branches of law and a competitive study and research method. The final dissertation, about 320 pages, wanted to offer a substantial proof to the public opinion and the scientific community about the conditions of the people under investigation. Meaning that, even today, people under investigation are more likely an object of the criminal procedure, rather than a part with rights and dignity. The study of the provisions and jurisprudence concerning interrogation in incommunicado and pre trial detention was mainly focused on the United States and German system with special attention, for the latter, to the European Court of Human Rights' jurisprudence which, at least theoretically, should actively defend human rights, especially in such times like the one we are living in when police is tempted to forget his boundaries under the feeling to prevent any form crime. Dates Title of qualification awarded Principal subjects/occupational skills covered Name and type of organisation providing education and training	15th Dec. 2008; BA in Law, mark 99/110. Doctor in Juridical science The course in Legal Sciences held by the University of Genoa, School of Law offers a basic but complete juridical knowledge for those whom are willing to enter in the world of business and work in public agencies, banks, insurance companies, police and so on. The final dissertation of the course, about 100 pages, had the aim to set out the problems minorities are suffering in the United States. The goal was to prove that, even in the new millennia, religion and conservative morality still can influence the legislator by setting anachronistic rules, or by non overruling them, imposing on minorities life stiles that doesn't allow them to express themselves. In the specific, the dissertation offered a reconstruction of the sodomy laws enforcement till the U.S. Supreme Court's ruling Lawrence v. Texas. Thanks to this decision, given after years of social pressure, there is the now the constitutional right to freely choose the partner and, maybe, this might be the start, sincerely speaking still far away, for the end of the American moral legislation. (Title of the dissertation: Sodomy Laws and Fate of the Moral Legislation in the United States of America). University of Genoa, School of law
